

INSTITUTES FOR VIRGINIA FARMERS

Has Made Much Progress in the Past Two Years.

CENTRAL STATE INSTITUTE

The Second Annual Meeting About September 1st.

(Written for The Times-Dispatch.)
BLACKSBURG, VA., June 24.—Farmers' institutes are not a new institution in Virginia. They have been well and favorably known for a number of years past, though in the last year or two they have probably made more progress than at any period since their inception. While considerable progress has been made in organizing county institutes in the various parts of the State, no effort was made to organize a central State institute until last year, when a meeting was called in the city of Roanoke about the first of September by some live and progressive farmers. The meeting was well attended, all things considered, and a permanent organization was effected and the following officers elected to take charge of the work for another year:

Ex-Governor J. Hoge Tyler, president, East Radford.
T. O. Sandy, first vice-president, Burkeville.
John T. Cowan, second vice-president, Cowan's Mills.
Andrew M. Soule, dean of the College of Agriculture and director of the Experiment Station, Blacksburg.
J. M. Williams, industrial department, Norfolk and Western Railroad, assistant secretary, Roanoke.

The Executive Committee met some time ago and decided to hold the second annual meeting in the city of Roanoke on July 12th, 13th and 14th. The officials of the Norfolk and Western Railroad were approached and gladly consented to make a single fare rate for the institute, all things considered, and it is a permanent organization was effected and the following officers elected to take charge of the work for another year:

The programme is now in the course of preparation and already the services of several distinguished men have been secured to take part in the discussion. Some of these gentlemen come from the State, but owing to their long and active connection with institute work, their names are not unfamiliar to us. Among the number secured are Hon. T. B. Terry, of Hudson, O., who will discuss the subject of "Soil Rejuvenation and Management." Mr. Terry is eminently qualified to speak on this subject, for he started with an extremely poor farm and has achieved wonders with it; so much so that his name is known far and wide as one of the most practical and successful speakers now on the institute platform.

Those who know of Mr. Joseph E. Wing, of Mechanicsburg, O., will be glad to hear that his services have been secured to address the institute on the subject of Alfalfa. Alfalfa is undoubtedly attracting more attention than any other crop grown in the State at the present time. Mr. Wing has done more than any one else to demonstrate the feasibility of cultivating alfalfa on the clay lands of the east, having brought it to Ohio from the West many years ago. Mr. Wing is a particularly interesting and instructive speaker and it will be a treat to hear him.

Professor John H. Hamilton, institute specialist of the United States Department of Agriculture, has also promised to be present and his addresses are always interesting and to the point.

Besides the above it is expected that many of the leading farmers of Virginia who have specialized in the production of corn, tobacco, cattle, apple growing, etc., will be present and deliver addresses. Several of the more important subjects being investigated at the experiment station will be presented for the consideration of the delegates.

tion of the delegates. Among those may be mentioned the results of feeding trials with beef and dairy cattle and the general educational work of the college and station. It is safe to say that not one farmer in a hundred understands or appreciates the value of the information which the station is accumulating from day to day for his benefit and which is free of cost for the asking, either through the published bulletins or by letters addressed to the individual members of the staff.

The horticultural interests of the State will not be overlooked on the programme and due attention will be given to our insect and fungous pests. The question of sheep husbandry will be discussed by Hon. J. F. Jackson, editor of the Southern Planter, in Richmond, and the trucking interests by a number of very well known farmers. The programme will thus be the best that can be provided, as neither labor nor expense will be spared to make it both educational and practical in the strictest interpretation of these words.

The delegates can thus rest assured that coming to the institute they will obtain information from experts who have made a practical success of the subjects they will be called on to discuss.

Finally those who attend the institute are urged to come prepared to enter into a discussion of the various subjects on the programme, as it is in this way that the greatest benefit will be derived, and every man, no matter how humble his station, will be treated cordially and his opinions welcomed, provided he will confine himself strictly to a discussion of the subject in hand.

FUTURE BRIGHT.
It is hardly necessary to say that there is a bright future before Virginia farmers; that the greatest need at the present time is organization and a better knowledge of the scientific facts related to farming. There is a better way to do things than in the past, and it is the pursuit of the better that alone insures success.

There is room for specialization in a hundred different ways by the farmers of the State, and it is the purpose and object of this institute to try and inspire our farmers and to lead them onward and upward to better things. The meeting is utterly devoid of any religious or political bias and is strictly what its name interprets—a farmers' institute or school. So far as the writer knows, there is no person connected with it who has in past years grinded or ambitions to salivate through it. It is a purely missionary effort for the purpose of disseminating useful facts and information relating to agriculture.

It is but the outgrowth of similar organizations in other States, where work of wonderful value has been accomplished through just such gatherings.

By it and through it the farmers of Virginia will have an opportunity to meet with each other and discuss subjects which are of momentous concern to them. The institute was organized solely with the idea of promoting the social feature of farm life. It would well repay hundreds of farmers for attending it. The mere mingling with one's fellow-men, gaining new ideas and gathering inspiration is of itself a whole lot, and one of the best ways of insuring progress. But the social feature, as the programme indicates, will constitute but one phase of this important gathering, as much useful information will be disseminated throughout the entire three days of the meeting, as the exceptionally strong programme now in course of preparation testifies. Can the farmers afford to go? How can they afford to stay away, in view of the liberal rates made by the railroads and the excellent programme which has been prepared? It has paid farmers in other States to make any sort of sacrifice to attend these meetings; it will pay our farmers just as well.

SILCO IN FAVOR.
The writer had the honor to be the secretary of the East Tennessee Farmers' Convention and Farmers' Institute for five years. This organization met in Knoxville, Tenn., and over 3,000 tickets were sold to the annual meeting. Five years ago there were comparatively few silos in East Tennessee; little attention was given to the feeding of live stock, and less attention to the breeding and improvement of the same. Nearly all the corn crop was being decaying plowed and the roots broken and destroyed, though they are the means by which the plant is fed. Many useful crops, such as alfalfa, soy beans, etc., were practically unknown. Did the convention do these farmers any good? Not long ago it was the writer's privilege to visit a live stock sale in Bristol, where some forty-three head of short horn cattle were sold at an average of $100. Nearly all of these animals, though bred in Virginia, went to upper East Tennessee, showing how thoroughly the people have come to appreciate the merits of improved stock. Then, they are building many silos, and are striving to get more corn for years the sole animal feed has been to grow corn. They are endeavoring to build up and reclaim the land through the use of leguminous crops. They have come to appreciate the difference between good and bad varieties of corn and wheat, and the necessity of improving the same through selection. The writer knows that a good part of this uplifting of the agricultural classes is due to the effects of their gathering together in annual convention and discussing the hundred and one important problems with which the farmer has to deal. They were benefited and interested by their annual tour of inspection of the Station farm. They learned to know and to appreciate the value of education, and hence sent many of their sons to the College of Agriculture that they might learn of the new gospel of agriculture and go out and become missionaries in the various communities in which they reside, and so it will be with a convention in Virginia organized and fostered along similar lines.

As already stated, no effort will be spared by the officers of the institute to provide an interesting and instructive programme; one that will bring within the reach of hundreds of our farmers information of a practical nature, which they can take home with them and apply to advantage in their business. The officers of the convention will endeavor to do their part. Will the farmers of Virginia avail themselves of this splendid opportunity? Will they attend the institute and come within reach of its inspiring influences, or will they stay away, believing that they know all there is to know about agriculture, and that they cannot afford to take the time away from their business or spend the small amount of money necessary to go to Roanoke? We believe that they will go, and that the coming convention will be largely attended, and that any other similar gathering in the South. Every one will be welcome. No delegates can be appointed this year, owing to the fact that congressional vice-presidents were not elected at the last meeting; but a committee of one to interest his friends and neighbors in the gathering, success beyond the fondest hopes of the officers of the institute will be assured.

VIRGINIA BEACH IS AS GAY AS EVER

A Little More Improved, But the Same Familiar Scenes.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)
VIRGINIA BEACH, June 24.—Virginia Beach this year presents the same scene that so many Virginians and people from other States love so well. Improvements, of course, have been going on in the hotels; cottages have been built, but the greatest of all is in the pavilion. Here is a new ball room, managed by O'Keefe, who is almost as well known as the Beach. With music furnished by a band of seventeen pieces, this place promises to be most popular during the season. Of course, the Princess Anne continues to attract large crowds, and now, with the heated term upon us, couples can be seen wending their way into the ball room and thence out to stroll on the board walk.

Several bowling parties are scheduled for next week, when O'Keefe begins awarding prizes for high scores. Arrangements have begun for a "bal poudre," to be given during the Fourth of July week for the benefit of the Infants' Sanitarium.

The occasion, which is under the management of Miss Louise Pannill, Misses Laura Kirk and Miss Margaret Pannill will doubtless be an added attraction for that time, which is the height of the season at this resort.

Among the recent arrivals and departures are: Miss Lucy Christian and Miss Jones, of Richmond, are at Miss Pollock's cottages for two weeks.

Farmers just at this season of the year are as busy as busy can be cutting wheat, oats and rye, while the cowboys and hay crop are in need of notice. The season is all that can be wished for and if the city cousins, aunts and uncles want to keep in the good graces of their country kinfolks they had better keep quiet just at this hustling time.
